

Is it ok to start a consensual sexual relationship with a vulnerable victim?

DON'T

Officers hold positions of trust. We don't want to lose good officers because they have not thought through their actions.

Where's the line?

They trust you. We trust you.

Is it ok to make a move
on a suspect, witness or victim?

We are in a unique position, invited into people's homes and provided with the most intimate details of their lives. We cannot take advantage of this.

Where's the line?

They trust you. We trust you.

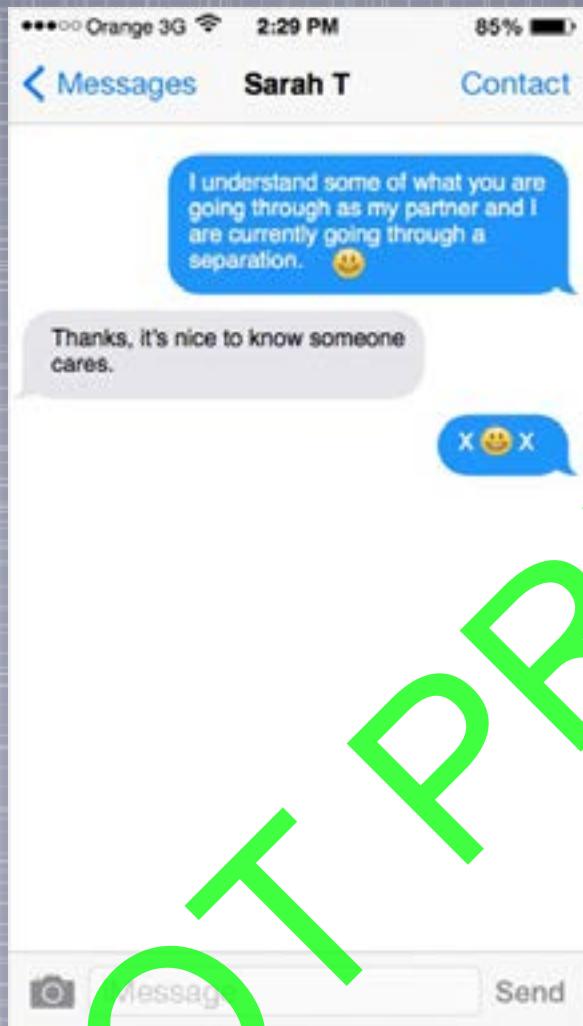

DO NOT PRINT
It's not worth the risk

Victims trust us to act with the utmost professionalism.
Inappropriate relationships damage public confidence and affect the criminal justice system.

Where's the line?

They trust you. We trust you.

When does being friendly and professional step into something different? It's not worth the risk.

We don't want to lose good officers; we want to be delivering the kind of service that makes us proud every day.

Where's the line?

They trust you. We trust you.

Bristol Post

THU 20.2 °C Cloudy

News Sport What's On Jobs Property Motors Directory Notices Buy & Sell

Crime | Business | Transport | Health | Education | Politics | Jobs

Bristol detective sacked for having sex multiple times with "extremely vulnerable" victim

Bristol Post

THU 20 °C Cloudy

News Sport What's On Jobs Property Motors Directory Notices Buy & Sell

Detective sacked after being accused of starting sexual relationship with major crime victim

Mail Online

Home News U.S. | Sport | TV&Showbiz | Australia | Female | Health | Science | Money

Latest Headlines | News | World News | U.S. Headlines | Pictures | Most read | News Board | Wires

Award-winning detective who repeatedly had sex with an 'extremely vulnerable' crime victim after meeting up with her and handing over his personal number is sacked

DO NOT PUBLISH

Is it worth the risk?

We don't want to lose good officers; we want to be delivering the kind of service that makes us proud every day.

Where's the line?

They trust you. We trust you.